Destiny Crowley is a PhD candidate in the History of Art and Architecture. Ms. Crowley’s research examines disability, violence, race and aesthetics in photography and painting through the 19th to early 20th century United States. She was born and raised in Oklahoma and earned a B.A. in Russian Studies from the University of Oklahoma in 2016. She loves poetry, baking for her friends and family, and watching sunsets over the ocean on the West Coast.

Rebecca Gourevitch is a PhD Candidate in the Health Policy PhD Program at Harvard University (Methods for Policy Research track). Her work uses quantitative methods to study quality, affordability, and access to health care for pregnant people in the United States. Rebecca completed her Master of Science in Health Policy & Management at the Harvard T.H. Chan School of Public Health in 2016. Before coming to Harvard, she worked as a research assistant at the Center for Studying Health System Change in Washington, D.C (now part of Mathematica Policy Research). She holds a B.A. in Psychology from Carleton College.

Robert Stone is a PhD candidate in his sixth year in the Department of Germanic Languages and Literatures, focusing on the late 19th and early 20th Centuries, depictions of science in literature and narratives of German national identity. In addition to his research and teaching responsibilities, he also currently serves as a Coordinating Resident Advisor in the GSAS Residence Halls. A native of Atlanta, Georgia, prior to beginning his studies at Harvard, Robert completed a BA at Columbia University and an MA at the University of Virginia, and taught for a year in the American Studies department at the Technische Universität Dortmund in Germany.